JUDGE RUMMY in SMOKEY SMOKES - Bray International Studios.

Judge Rummy, an inveterate smoker, is presented by his wife, with a bargain box of cigars, for his birthday. He tries one, but the "kick" is too much for him and everything goes black. When we see the Judge again, the doctor is telling him to stop smoking. After relieving Rummy of his watch and money, the doctor goes.

Rummy starts to light another cigar, but thinks that perhaps the doctor was right after all, so goes for a walk instead. While strolling along, he passes a cigar store, and is sorely tempted to buy a cigar, but again the doctor's warning flashes through his mind, and he resists the temptation.

He then sees a man drop a perfectly good cigar. He cannot hold out any longer and reaches out for the cigar. However, a thug beats him to it. It seems as though temptation is not through with him yet, however, for almost immediately after this incident, he meets Silk Hat Harry smoking a cigar bigger than himself. Harry says that this is the one cigar a day which the doctor permits him to smoke.

Rummy asks for a drag, but Harry does not feel that he can spare even this much from the one-a-day cigar, and only blows the smoke into the judge's face, after which he runs away.

Rummy too, walks away, and meets a Chinaman smoking an opium pipe. He greedily grabs the pipe and starts smoking. He seems to hear all the sounds of the zoo, and tries to escape. After a hot chase, he is caught by a monkey which immediately begins to shake him. At this climax, he awakes to find his wife shaking him, and he hears her ask "How are the cigars?" Rummy does not answer, but throws the box of cigars into the stove and enjoys seeing them explode and go up in smoke.

LAMPOONS

A series of clever sayings, gibes, jests, and jokes, clipped from the press of the world, about twelve in all.
